Studies have shown that:

- Children's reading skills deteriorate during the summer break.
- Those children who struggle the most with reading suffer the greatest decline in reading skills over the summer.
- Over a single academic year, this can result in a reading skills gap of up to three months between more advantaged and less advantaged students.
- Between grades 1 and 6, the accumulated achievement gap can correspond to up to 1.5 years of reading development, simply because the children read less during the summer months.
